Homeland security department reviewing 'out-of-the-box' pitch in which immigrants would compete for citizenship

The US Department of Homeland Security is reportedly considering an "out-of-the-box" pitch to participate in a television gameshow that would have immigrants compete to obtain US citizenship.

Department spokesperson Tricia McLaughlin described the pitch to the New York Times as a "celebration of being an American" and said the show would include challenges based on American traditions.

In a statement, McLaughlin said: "We need to revive patriotism and civic duty in this country, and we're happy to review out-of-the-box pitches. This pitch has not received approval or rejection by staff."
